

Central Bank Research Association Event Media Policy

The mission of the Central Bank Research Association (CEBRA) is to encourage applied and theoretical research on topics relevant to central banks, financial regulators, international financial institutions, and fiscal authorities, as well as to connect the research staff of these institutions with academia. CEBRA regularly organizes seminars, meetings, conferences and other activities for the purposes of sharing recent research findings.

CEBRA is dedicated to promoting the discussion of research in an open, transparent environment. However, on occasion, it may organise closed-door discussions that are off-the-record.

The media are welcome to attend all public CEBRA events, but must register with the organizers of the event, and adhere to any guidelines issued by the organizers on when it is appropriate to ask questions.

When an event features speakers who are principals of their institutions and are authorized to speak on behalf of their institution (e.g. central bank governors, executive board members, regional reserve bank presidents and so on), their remarks may be reported as such, unless the speaker indicates that they are expressing a personal rather than an institutional opinion.

When an event features speakers who are staff members or officials who are not authorized to speak on behalf of their institution, they will usually issue a standard disclaimer at the beginning of their presentation stating such. In any case, their remarks should be reported as the scientific findings of the individual rather than an institutional view.

Disclaimer: Participation in a CEBRA seminar, meeting, conference or activity does not constitute or imply an endorsement, recommendation or favouring endorsement of the views, opinions, products or services of the Central Bank Research Association or any other participating institution, individual or entity. All views expressed during a CEBRA or CEBRA co-hosted event are strictly those of the authors, discussants, and other participants and not those of CEBRA, the co-sponsoring institutions or any other participating institution.
